Municipality Prevails in U.S. Court of Appeals in Case of First Impression

Representation of the Town of Palm Beach in a matter of first impression in the area of land use and constitutional law. A longtime resident argued that the Town's architectural review commission violated his constitutionally protected First Amendment right to freedom of expression and his Fourteenth Amendment rights to due process and equal protection when it denied his application to demolish his traditional-style home and construct a new international/modern-style home on the oceanfront lot. The commission denied the application because the proposed mansion was "excessively dissimilar" from other nearby homes in accordance with various architectural design criteria. The Southern District of Florida granted summary judgment in the Town's favor and the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Eleventh Circuit affirmed in June 2021. The federal appellate court held that although the resident may have intended to communicate a message through his proposed home, there was no great likelihood that a reasonable viewer would understand it to convey some sort of message where the residence was set back from the street and obscured by dense landscaping there was no evidence that residential architecture has been historically used or understood to convey a message. The court also rejected the resident's attempt to void the Town's architectural review ordinance. The resident petitioned the U.S. Supreme Court for review, but the court ultimately declined to hear the appeal in March 2022.

Municipality Sued Over Adoption of Waterfront Setback Line

Constitutionality of Proposed Ballot Initiative

A property-use agreement between municipality and owners of historic 60-year-old playhouse limited playhouse's use as theater of performing or visual arts and for lectures or other special events. Political action committee sought to amend municipality's charter to incorporate portions of the agreement's covenants. For municipality, obtained declaration that proposed amendment was unconstitutional as in conflict with state comprehensive planning law and did not have to be put to a vote. Defended declaration through appeal to the Fourth District and Florida Supreme Court decision declining jurisdiction.
